

George M. Doolittle

Executive Vice President
Head of Global Payment Services
International Group
Wells Fargo & Company

George Doolittle is an executive vice president and head of Global Payment Services for the Wells Fargo International Group (IG). Based in Philadelphia, George manages the team responsible for payment and liquidity management, operating risk, sales, marketing, and product strategy. He also oversees Global Client Services and is the president of the Wells Fargo administrative captive service center in Chennai, India.

IG serves small businesses, corporations, financial institutions, multilateral organizations, and individuals with a wide range of international solutions from more than 30 overseas locations, including branches in Hong Kong, London, Seoul, Shanghai, Singapore, Taipei, Tokyo, and the Cayman Islands.

George began his career with Philadelphia National Bank in 1981 in international operations, moving to the bank's Americas Group in 1983. Two years later, he moved to Paris to join the Europe Group as country manager for Belgium, France, Luxembourg, and the Netherlands. In 1993, he was promoted to group head for Europe and Africa. George then relocated to London and joined the London Branch Management Committee.

George earned an A.B. in economics and international studies from Oberlin College in Ohio, and pursued further education at the University of Pennsylvania Wharton School of Business.

George is the chairman of the U.S. Cash and Trade Committee as a member of the U.S. SWIFT National Group, and he is a member of SWIFT's Standards Advisory Council. He also serves on the CHIPS Business Committee in New York, Payment Market Practices Group, Payment Council of the European Savings Banks, and as a trustee of the International House of Philadelphia.

George lives in Philadelphia with his wife and two children.

Together we'll go far

